State and County Officials of North Carolina

2000

A Message from North Carolina's Secretary of State

Welcome to a new millennium for North Carolina state and county government! Our state's population and economy have boomed in recent decades. These trends, coupled with the increasingly urban nature of development throughout the state, have made providing essential government services a much more complex task than ever before.

Success in terms of providing government service can be measured, in part, by how easy various agencies make it for customers to get the information and assistance they need. As state government diversifies and meets new challenges, citizens can become overwhelmed. All governments struggle with this problem. It is one of the most critical ones facing us because citizen trust and faith in any government depends in large degree on how well people feel they have been treated when conducting transactions with government agencies.

This directory has become an important gateway for North Carolina's citizens, our business community and local governments to contact the agencies that can best provide the particular service they need. Ironically, the directory is almost as important to state government workers themselves as they navigate this complex landscape. I am very proud that we can provide this directory as a service to all of these user groups. The N.C. Department of the Secretary of State takes its role of putting citizens in touch with their state government very seriously. I know that it will serve as a valuable reference work for you. I hope it will also remind you that our agency is working to connect you to your state and county government.
